Gardens of Water

Van Ness Water Gardens

The sound of trickling water can be heard as visitors walk the gardens.

The beautiful purple, blue, pink or yellow water lilies sway with the soft breeze, looking more like dancing ballerinas than flowers.

Under water, reddish and black spotted Koi fish play a game of hide and seek while swimming around the stems of the lilies and bog plants.

This peaceful environment is the Van Ness Water Gardens, a family oriented business located in San Antonio Heights that sells a variety of lilies, plants or any equipment needed to set up a water garden.

Bill Uber is the third generation owner of the gardens. The gardens were begun by Edith and Robert Van Ness in the early '30s. They later sold the gardens to their cousins Ted Uber, Bill's father, in 1952.

The gardens, which contains more than 300 different varieties of water lilies, are known around the world for their flowers.

"We sell to people in Australia, Japan and Germany," Uber said.

There are only four major water gardens currently operating in the United States and only eight in the world, Uber said.

"We are the only one this side of Texas," he said.

Several celebrities are Van Ness customers, including George Kennedy and Bo Derek, according to the owners.

Andy Long, of Upland, who has been working at the gardens for eight years, helped Derek clean out her pond.

"I never took so long to clean a pond in my life," Long said as a grin spread across his face.

Putting in a water garden can be expensive, Uber said.

An 800 pond, complete with plants, fish and the necessary chemicals, could run to between $600 to $800.

"But once the garden is started, maintaining it is not high," he said. "If you have a balanced garden, then you only need to work with it about 15 minutes a month."

The water gardens are not for everybody, Uber said.

"We deal only in the elite," Uber said. "Only those people who really enjoy their back yards."

During the school year, teachers from around the area bring their students to see the gardens. Clubs and other organizations also frequent the place. The gardens are open to the public Tuesday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

On display is one pond showing the proper distribution of plants, algae and water. The other ponds are used for testing and growing water gardens.

Lilies are also bred at the gardens. Tina, a amethyst flower with a gold center that is named after his daughter, took eight years to perfect.

"It's the best plant we have on the place," Uber said proudly.

Only two types of lilies are sold, tropical and hardy. The tropical bloom year around and the hardy flower from February to November.

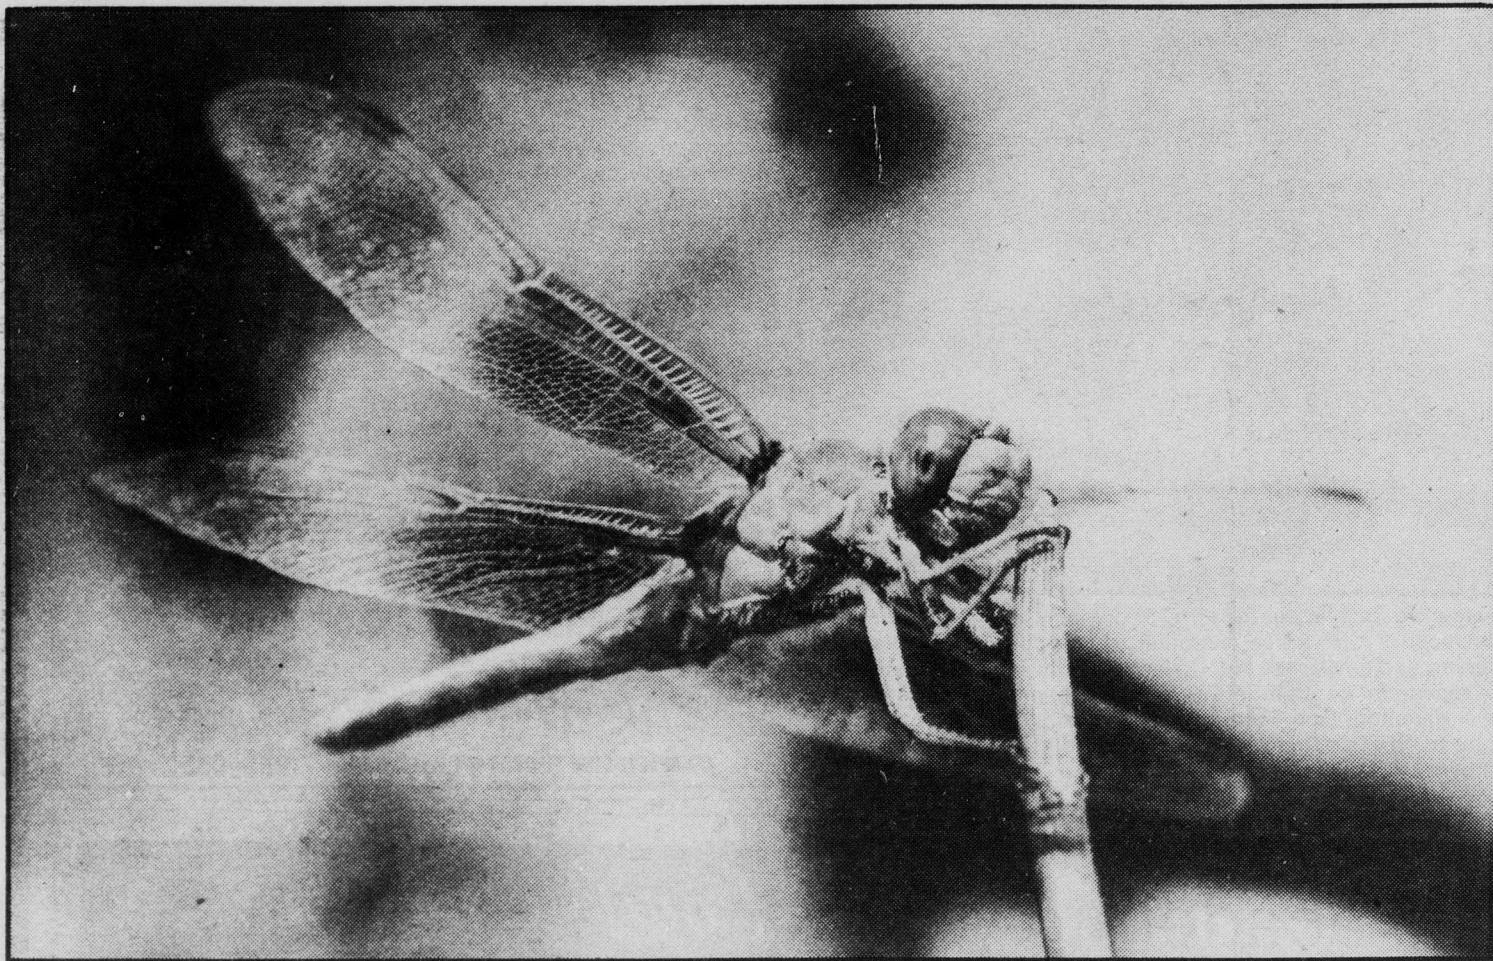

There is also day time and night time flowers, which open accordingly.

Although he loves it now, Uber hated to work in the gardens as a child.

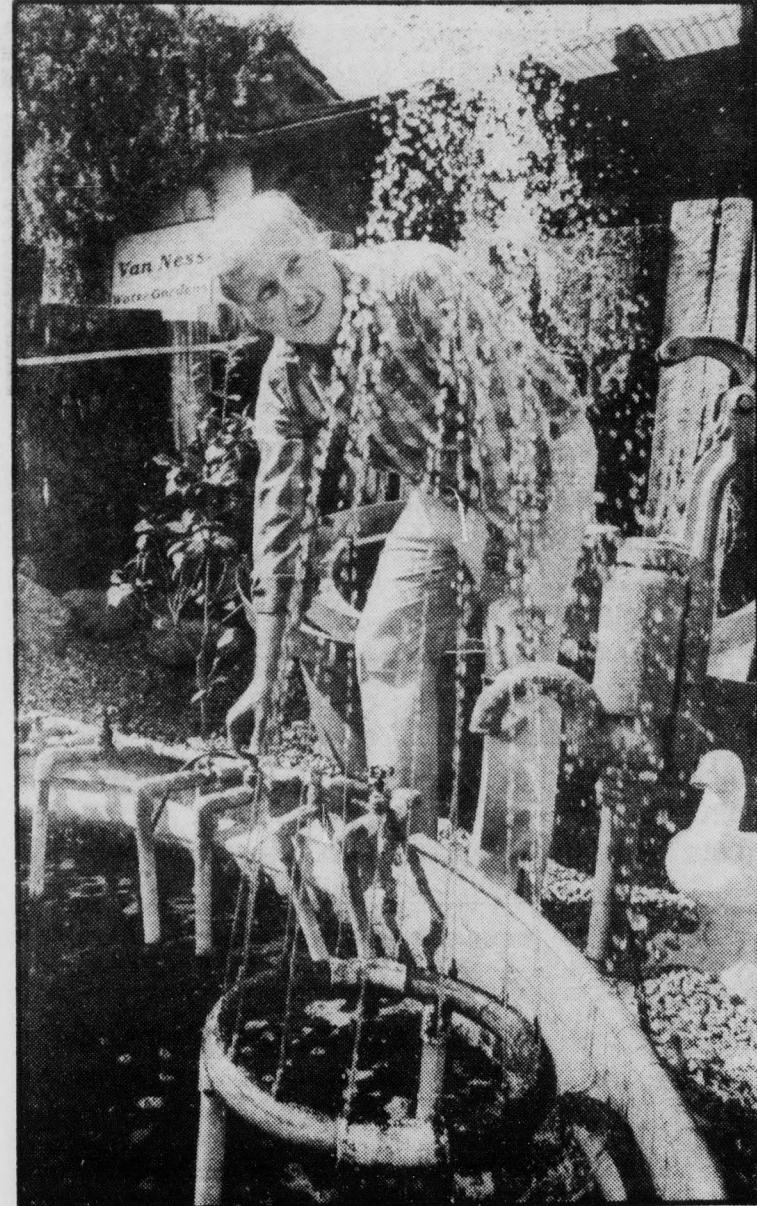

"We worked here all the time," he said. "During vacations, at night and on weekends. When ever I would be getting ready to go out, a truck delivering fertilizer would show up. I don't know how many times I went on a date smelling like fertilizer."

Now he likes to joke about how successful he has become.

"Not very," he said, with a laugh. "I've gone from my bedroom to my bedroom. You see, my office is where my bedroom used to be."

Cucamonga Schools leader kicks off 1986-87 academic year

By Marianne Aiken

Cucamonga School District Superintendent John Costello kicked off the 1986-87 academic year last Friday with a breakfast at Rancho Cucamonga Middle School.

Costello summed up the district's mission with this statement: "To make our district a happy, productive environment where students are challenged to reach their learning potential and all staff can make significant contributions in a professional atmosphere where everyone is treated with respect and courtesy."

Costello said the 1,500-student district would continue to expand its programs and services during the coming school year.

Developing an institutional program that is a model of excellence is one of the district's goals, he said.

Developing "team spirit" is another one.

"Every member should have the opportunity to grow professionally and to make a significant contribution in meeting our mission," he said.

Making the district a satisfying and happy place to work and continuing to improve facilities "so our schools are conducive to the learning process" are other goals.

The district should be a place "where all decisions are made with only one focus, of how decisions will assist us in improving, expanding and assisting our instructional program," he said.

R.C. Frog Jump Jamboree due this weekend

Local leapers get ready! The Rancho Cucamonga Community Services Department is again holding their annual Frog Jumping Jamboree.

The top 10 finalists in each category will jump off for the championship at the Los Angeles County Fair Sunday at 3 p.m. Passes to the fair will be provided for all frog jockeys in the finals.

The cost is $2 if you have a local leaper or $5 if you want to adopt-a-frog. All adopt-a-frogs will remain the property of the owners.

Chaffey College recruits students in blitz campaign

By Marianne Aiken

Chaffey College is getting inventive about recruiting new students.

Jan Braunstein, dean of student services, described the efforts at filling the Rancho Cucamonga campus with new faces as an all-out "blitz."

So far, 400 people have responded to a register-by-mail campaign started Aug. 19, and 80 new students signed up for classes during registration at the Montclair Plaza over the Labor Day weekend.

Classes start Monday and registration will continue until next Friday.

"We decided we needed to do something really dramatic to boost our enrollment," Braunstein said.

Enrollment this year is expected to decline about three percent, with between 11,000 and 12,000 students on campus, according to Chaffey President Jerry Young.

In contrast, at Walnut's Mt. San Antonio College, Chaffey's main competitor, enrollment is expected to rise by three percent, with about 26,000 students on campus.

Why students choose to go to Mt. SAC instead of Chaffey is being studied, Braunstein said.

"A lot of it has to do with accessibility to the freeway, which we can't do anything about," she said.

Chaffey College is located on Haven Avenue, about five miles north of the San Bernardino Freeway.

The new recruitment effort is aimed at streamlining registration, promoting accessibility and making the community aware that there is such a place as Chaffey College, she said.

During the month of August, the college temporarily abandoned its traditional strategy of culling students from the high school market and instead focused on the older market.

"We decided to target re-entry students," people in the 20-to-35-year-old age group, Braunstein said.

The college sent out 65,000 registration mailers, most of them in the form of an advertising supplement to The Daily Report, 11,000 registration-by-mail applications to people who already had registration appointments, and 55,000 announcements about registering by mail at elementary and junior high schools.

"We thought we'd hit their parents," Braunstein said of the elementary school strategy.

In addition, the college is trying to beef up its corporate contacts to promote its training programs.

Hospital employees also will be recruited for the college's nursing program.

Braunstein is brainstorming about bringing college registration to high schools, expanding registration by phone and even thinking about registration by computer terminal.

The speaker's bureau is also being reinstated, with faculty available to talk about subjects ranging from stress to women's rights, Braunstein said.

The registration hotline is 989-1716.

Oriental fruit fly traps being set

SAN BERNARDINO — The county agricultural commission is setting traps just to the east of Fontana to lure and kill dreaded Oriental Fruit flies.

Officials became concerned after they found five adult fruit flies Tuesday and a sixth Wednesday at two sites in Grand Terrace.

On Wednesday, county crews took to the streets — 81 square miles of them — to quintuple the number of traps normally set to catch the flies.

The highest concentration of traps is in a one-square-mile core area around Grand Terrace.

R.C. park assessment district may win award

By Andrew Horan

Five months after a citizens' group failed to halt it, Rancho Cucamonga's special park assessment district may win the city a prestigious award.

Area schools short on funds for gifted

By Marianne Aiken

Half of the West Valley's public school districts have trouble funding programs for their best and brightest students.

Six of the 10 school districts in the West Valley receive funding for Gifted and Talented Education (GATE) programs from the state, and three of them say the money isn't quite enough.

Two other school districts have given up on the GATE program altogether and are trying alternative means to meet the needs of their above-average students.

Whereas special education for students who are on the other end of the exceptional spectrum is state-mandated, GATE programs are optional, said Norine Duke, coordinator of special programs for the Etiwanda School District.

"There's always a shortage of funds," Duke said. "We're allowed to have (funding for) 3 percent of the school's population. Therefore, if you have more students than that, the district has to pick up the charges on that."

See GATE/Page 9

The city is one of 51 California communities vying for the annual Helen Putnam Award for Excellence granted by the League of California Cities.

"I'm pleased for all the people who worked on the project, and for the community as a whole," said Bill Holley, the city's Community Services director.

In addition to the overall award, Rancho Cucamonga's park financing plan is competing in the community services category.

In May 1985, the city established a special assessment district for residents living within three miles of Red Hill and Heritage Parks to pay for development and maintenance of the facilities.

A league spokesman called the district "a new and innovative financing mechanism for park and recreation facilities."

Shelley White was named the Upland Public Library's Volunteer of the Year this summer because of the 20 to 30 hours of time she donates each week. She spends her time on special projects in the children's library.

Volunteer loves library

Children benefit from her dedication

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Hidden away in a cubbyhole in the back of the children's library in Upland, Shelley White is surrounded by witches and goblins.

White is practicing her own brand of witchcraft and there is nothing sinister about it. The witches and goblins are paper cutouts White is preparing for the library's Halloween booths at the city's October celebration in the Town Center.

She was also responsible for much of this summer's King Arthur and the Reading Round Table theme decorations around the children's section. From castles and dragons to pumpkins and ghosts, White is handy with the scissors and the paint.

She was named the library's Volunteer of the Year this summer because of the 20 to 30 hours of time she donates each week.

During the summer, she gets involved in the children's reading program, helping the youngsters with the computers, finding books and creating their own artwork.

The dedicated volunteer first became involved with the library after she needed something to do during recuperation from an illness. She had been replaced at her job as a teacher's aide at a private school during the illness, and wanted an activity to fill her time.

Because of the money, the district has a hard time finding GATE teachers, said Upland's Associate Superintendent Loren Sanchez.

"We have part-time certificated teachers that come into the elementary schools and work with GATE kids, on hourly paid status," Sanchez said. "It's difficult to continually find those people who are willing to do that kind of work."

The Central School District no longer takes GATE money from the state, said Superintendent Frank Cosca.

"For the small amount of money the state gives you, it isn't worth the red tape and restrictions that come with it."

Instead, Central created a special summer program for exceptional students which ran for four weeks this year for 36 students.

Cosca said he believes GATE programs should take place outside of regular class time.

"The issue is a philosophical issue: Do you have kids away full time in a GATE classroom? My feeling is that's not good for kids," Cosca said. "That tells the kids they're so different they have to be put in a special classroom. I don't think that prepares them to be in society."

OMSD takes a different approach, with most of its GATE instruction accomplished through "clustering" four to eight advanced students in the classroom, giving them 200 minutes a week of "qualitatively different instruction," according to the state definition.

OMSD GATE kids also participate in Saturday programs four or five times during the year, Lauria said.

Chino is the only area school district which has a self-contained GATE program, putting advanced students together in a school all day, five days a week.

Lee Kirk, director of guidance for the Chino Unified School District, estimated that over 600 students of the district's 17,100 population qualify for GATE programs, but 192 are served in the self-contained program.

The rest of them are "clustered."

Chino had a hard time finding GATE teachers this year, Kirk said. "We have to look for them," he said. "They're not coming out of the woodwork."

The Fontana Unified School District pulled out of the GATE program several years ago, said Gene Dobos, FUSD's director of secondary curriculum, because the red tape associated with the state funding just got to be too much.

"We meet their needs," Dobos said of the district's students who need accelerated instruction. "We're using lottery funds to provide programs for those students."

The Alta Loma and Mountain View School Districts have no GATE program.

The Chaffey Joint Union High School District, with six comprehensive high schools in the West Valley, spends the equivalent of one-fifth of the money it gets from the state for GATE instruction just on identifying the students who need it.

Sharon Andress, CJUHSD's GATE program specialist, said the district gets about $60,000 a year from the state, and spends $12,000 a year trying to figure out which incoming freshman should be in the GATE program.

"The money we spend on identification takes away from the money we can spend on materials," she said.

Upland council approves parks plan

By Kimberly Heinrichs

After eight months of postponement the Upland City Council finally approved a long-term plan last week for its parks to add to its general plan.

The plan amendment lists nine priorities for park development in the city starting with the addition of group picnic areas at Memorial, Baldy View, Magnolia and Sierra Vista parks.

$4 million needed for Upland parks

By Kimberly Heinrichs

Upland must come up with more than $4 million to pay for parks called for in the city's new park plan.

Because of comparatively low fees charged to residential developers, the city faces some tough decisions on how to raise the extra funds to build all the parks it wants, and to add new facilities to its present ones.

Recreation Director Larry Thornburg said that to complete its priority list alone the city will need approximately $6 million. However, it will only have about $1.6 million with the present rate of its park development fees, he said.

While the department gets some funding from the state and federal governments, it relies mostly on fees charged to developers when new homes are built.

While other West Valley cities charge anywhere from $540 to $1,224 for single family homes, Upland only charges $140 a unit and an additional $50 for each bedroom. That would mean the developer of a typical three-bedroom would pay $240.

Other priorities include sports lighting and restrooms at some parks and development of new parks, including Pioneer and John. E. McCarthy parks. The McCarthy park is listed last on the list.

Completion of the nine priorities in the next 10-15 years would cost $6 million, Recreation Director Larry Thornburg estimated. With the $900,000 in park funds now and the money the fund will receive from park and recreation developer fees until build-out, he said the department will come up far short with only $1.6 million.

Mayor Richard Anderson objected to one of the Park and Recreation Committee's recommendations which would have required that after the sale or conversion of park land "equitable compensation" would be made to the park development fund.

"I would like to be that optimistic that our budget would always allow that tradeoff," he said, explaining that some time down the road the council might need to use that money for other needs like roads, trees or other items. He added that the council would always consider returning the money to the parks fund, however.

The other council members agreed to remove the clause.

Another of the committee's recommendations was to investigate the sale of two lots bought for future development of parks.

Thornburg said the 5 acres each at 20th Street and San Antonio Avenue and on 14th Street behind Sycamore School were picked out for possible sale. See PARKS/Page 16

Vote on adult-store law delayed again

By Kimberly Heinrichs

After listening to the warnings of an attorney for the only adult business in town, the Upland City Council again delayed its vote last week on a proposed adult entertainment ordinance.

The proposal also was postponed in May after the same attorney threatened lawsuits.

Roger Diamond, attorney for T&A Video, located at 2121 W. Foothill Blvd., told the council that a recent state Supreme Court decision made the city's proposed time restriction for adult businesses from 10 a.m. to 2 a.m., unconstitutional.

He charged that that and other provisions discriminated against adult businesses because they did not apply to all businesses in the city.

"It'll throw everything into the courts," he warned. "It'll be expensive for my client and for the city."

"I might point out that not too long ago a court did rule invalid your sign ordinance," he said, adding that he sees many of the same ambiguities in this law.

Because he was not familiar with the case, Upland City Attorney Don Maroney — who prepared the ordinance — asked for another two weeks to investigate. The council granted him his request 3-1, with Councilman Bob Nolan objecting without comment and Councilwoman Rosalie Kamansky absent.

However, Maroney expressed confidence that the other provisions would hold up in court, including a requirement that doors and curtains be removed from video viewing booths.

That would apply to T&A Video even though the business opened before the law existed, he said.

Diamond said that removing the doors would be expensive and inconvenient and asked for an exemption. Failing that, he asked that the three-month time requirement be changed to one year.

About 10 city residents appealed to the city to make the law tougher on adult businesses in a variety of ways.

Some asked for the delay also, but to study the Meese Commission on Pornography's recommendations rather than listen to Diamond.

Others objected to the loosening of the city's requirement in the original draft that X-rated businesses be located 1,000 feet away from residences.

Although the 1,000-foot requirement still holds in distances from schools, churches, other "sensitive uses" and other adult businesses, it was lowered to 500 feet for distance from homes.

"When we applied the criteria the only feasible area was the bottom of a gravel pit at the west end of Arrow Highway," Acting Planning Director Jeff Bloom said.

Cary Leach, an Upland resident who described himself as a real estate appraiser and father of six children, said that numerous other cities have passed the 1,000-foot requirement from homes. He said 500 feet was only five to eight houses in length. The effects of such businesses go well beyond that distance, he said.

T&A Video would comply with the distance requirements and would not have to move.

First Day of School

Crying children, crying mothers; it's that time of year.

Children throughout the West Valley arrived for the first day of school early this week.

But Monday was especially traumatic for some of the 190 children who entered Guasti Kindergarten School Monday for their first-ever school day.

"They're darling, as usual," smiled Gail Mandeville, back for her third year of teaching at the kindergarten-only school located by the San Bernardino Freeway on the grounds of the now-closed Brookside Winery.

Some of the children came happily to school, running ahead of parents who captured every shining moment on new-fangled video cameras or old-fashioned Polaroids.

Others, like 3-year-old Sara MacDonald, fought every step of the way.

"Oh, she's waving to me," sighed Sara's mother, Teri MacDonald, as she peered into her daughter's classroom.

"Oh, now she's crying. I think I'm going to cry," Teri said. Teri didn't break down, but soon Sara shot out of her class and into her mother's arms, sobbing.

"She wants to go (to school)," Teri said, "but she doesn't want to leave me."

"It's hard to cut the cord," she added.

But Ryan Moore, Sara's cousin, had no trouble severing family ties.

"He's wanted to go for days," laughed Tami Moore, Ryan's mother and Teri MacDonald's sister.

"He asked for the housekey so he could get in the house when he came home," she added.

Ryan was so anxious to meet new friends that "he kept looking in the mirror and asking, 'Do I look cute?'"

He did, Tami proudly assured a group of mothers who gathered in a school hallway to compare first-day notes.

Despite the usual first-day delays caused by late busses and shy children, the Monday came off without a hitch, according to Don Nicholson, Guasti's new principal.

Pacing back and forth between classrooms, Nicholson said he was excited, happy and anxious "just to help everybody out."

Most of the children didn't need much help. Soon, they mustered out to the playground; six battalions of toy soldiers marching out to conquer sand, slides and swingsets.

After a quick half-hour of play, most readily settled down to learn how to spell "Red" in Linda Purtle's class or how to listen politely to a story in Patricia Biehl's room.

"We'll start by teaching them the rules of being at school," Mandeville said from the playground.

Then she turned, smiled, and blew her whistle. □

Story by Andrew Horan
Photos by Alexander Gallardo

The first day of school was a happy one for many, but not all, of the 190 children attending Guasti Kindergarten School. For the Sheasby family of Rancho Cucamonga (opposite page) it was a day of video posterity. Soon after kindly teachers like Patricia Biehl (left) settled upset children, it was time to get to work (above) for Margaret Rodriguez' class.

Parks

"primarily because they were smaller neighborhood parks that didn't fulfill the needs of the larger active-use parks."

He added that nearby parks could take care of the residents by providing softball and soccer fields or tennis courts, as the public demands.

The committee suggested the money gained from the sale of the properties be used to develop the other parks further, he said.

But when the proposed plan was turned over to the Mayor's Advisory Committee this summer, it objected to selling park acreage.

In an August memo to the council, that committee recommended deleting the sale proposal from the plan. Members either felt the suggestion did not belong in the General Plan or that the land should be saved rather than "sacrificed to present budgetary crisis," according to the memo.

But Park and Recreation Committee Chairwoman Ilene Newman told the council that her committee stands by its recommendation.

"We did not make our decision because of a budgeting crisis," she said, adding that it was in the interest of longterm planning. "But the idea of funding did come back to us."

The council left the recommendations of investigating the sale of the two sites in, noting that they were only advisory notes and that extensive public hearings would be required if such a sale was proposed.

Thornburg first brought up the idea of formalizing the city's goals for its parks in a written document more than three years ago, when he noticed that the city was missing out on filing for government grants.

While some state and federal grants are given automatically, others are competitive and require well-thought out ideas, he explained.

"As grants became available we didn't have in mind what we would do with (it). By the time we had decided we had missed deadlines," he said.

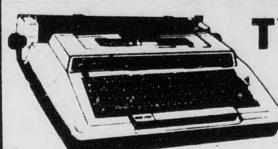

Thornburg said that having the plan would enable his department to prepare information in advance, so it could pull off the shelf and mail it with a fighting chance when grants were announced.

But the recreation director added that just having the plan would organize park development and would base it on population needs rather than geographic balance.

"Before it happened as it happened," he said. "The developing of parks was just done haphazard."

Councilman Frank Carpenter, who represents the council on the Park and Recreation Advisory Committee, agreed, adding that he favors a bond issue.

month, City Manager Lee Travers said.

In the meantime, Carpenter said the council and perhaps the Chamber of Commerce will take a look at the problem.

"We have talked about presenting a bond issue to the citizenry for park purposes ...

and making a case to the public," he said.

He said he favors a general tax increase for the whole city rather than assessment districts — like those created in Rancho Cucamonga — because parks are often used by those throughout the city.

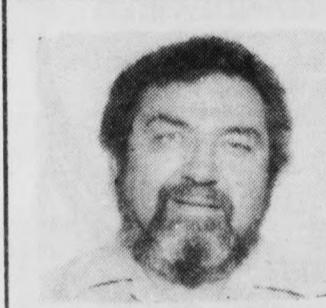

While many area cities have annual reviews of their park development fees, Upland has not dealt with it since 1978.

Thornburg said he first discussed raising the fees when he became director about two years later.

"There was a general feeling at the staff level that it might not be a good time," he said.

"I think from time to time it has been brought up but for whatever reason it wasn't decided to raise it," said Carpenter, who has been a member of the advisory committee for about three years.

ENTERTAINMENT & DINING GUIDE

Globetrotter won't switch with anyone

By Matt Coker

Thousands of people would pack into auditoriums when Meadowlark Lemon appeared all over the world in his familiar red, white and blue Harlem Globetrotters uniform.

Sporting blue jeans, a yellow polo shirt and a blue satin jacket with the words "Shooting Stars" embroidered on the back, he faced a crowd of less than 500 at Montclair High School's football stadium Thursday night.

But the former clown prince of basketball, who admitted he was unsure where exactly he was, wouldn't switch places for the world.

Lemon spoke and showed off some fancy basketball passing techniques at a free anti-drug rally sponsored by Chino's Echoes of Faith Christian Center.

In a pre-appearance interview,

Lemon said: "We're here because we felt it might do some good for one person at least. If you can do some good for one person, it's worth the drive out here."

Lemon drove to Montclair from his Huntington Beach area home. This morning he is scheduled to leave for Vancouver, British Columbia, for two days of appearances there. Like his previous career, ministering is taking Lemon all over the world.

"This is something that is really changing my life completely. This is a whole lot different than what I came of. I've found people who really love me."

Lemon, who was raised a Catholic, said he became a born-again Christian four years ago. For two years he has hosted a show on the Trinity Broadcasting Network, a Christian cable channel, which features athletes and other famous people who have become Christians.

He now is heavily involved in the nationwide anti-drug effort. He met with First Lady Nancy Reagan six months ago and joined her "Say No to Drugs" program.

"Her vision is to see a drug-free America," he said.

When it comes to drug abuse, a great deal of attention is directed toward the athletic and entertainment industries — both of which Lemon has been a part.

But he pointed out that those entities account for a small percentage of the population, as well as the nation's drug problem.

"It's in the streets. It's in the colleges, the universities. It's in the schools. It's in the metropolitan areas and the rural areas. It's in places where 10 and 15 years ago it wasn't," he said of drugs.

"Now people are saying 'Hey, it's hitting home. You're killing babies. It's time to do something about it.'

Soft-spoken, he gave his age as "between 18 and 100." He appears fit enough to play on any court.

He parted company with the "Trotters," as he refers to them, in 1978. Why did he leave?

"You don't have enough time," he said with a cold stare. "I've always said I would never say something bad about the Trotters. They gave me an opportunity. They gave me a start. I think the organization is a good organization."

After leaving the Globetrotters, he formed a mirror-like team known as the "Bucketeers," which since has disbanded. Now, along with some other former Trotters, he is playing with a team called the "Shooting Stars."

"We'll come through (this area) sometime this year," he pledged.

He is also finishing an autobiography titled "Meadowlark" which he said should be out in early spring.

After music by a Christian band, Lemon took the stage carrying a shoulder bag. He pulled out a basketball and passed it around with four women.

A man holding the microphone snapped his fingers and whistled "Sweet Georgia Brown."

For a moment, it seemed just like old times. For Lemon, it was even better.

ALHS teacher 'helps out' with books

By Suzanne Sproul

Stacked rather haphazardly in Clark Heiple's office and garage are bundles of every kind of book imaginable.

But the mess doesn't necessarily bother the Alta Loma High School teacher. He knows where every book is and where it is destined.

Because of Heiple, schoolchildren throughout the world have the opportunity to read. Heiple is an active member of the non-profit International Book Project, based in Kentucky.

"I found out about it in 1979 while reading an article in the Christian Science Monitor. I thought it was a worthwhile project, particularly since the people involved tell you where the money and books are going," Heiple said. "I just was interested in helping out."

Heiple has "helped out" by sending more than 10,000 books overseas to countries including India, China, Romania, Africa and the U.S.S.R. The International Reading Association recently honored him with the Literacy Award for his efforts in promoting reading worldwide.

Although he enjoys the personal satisfaction of knowing he's helping people to expand their minds, Heiple said one of the most fun aspects of his association with the organization is the people. Heiple corresponds almost daily with students and teachers, who ask him about certain books.

He also encourages many of his students to write to other students in various countries.

"The young people can exchange ideas and find out that the world doesn't seem so bad," he said.

Heiple stockpiles his book cache through the help of West Valley schools and individuals. He's willing to except most books, particularly instructional ones, as long as they are in good condition.

"In most of these countries the people just can't afford books because they're so expensive. When I send them books, the people always offer to pay me, but I tell them that's not necessary, especially since most of them don't have any money," he said.

But he does ask them to send stamps from their countries. Heiple collects them and decorates gifts with them.

"You have to be careful about what you send these people in particular countries. You learn a lot doing this, like you can't send T-shirts with printing on them to China because the government there prohibits it," he said.

Heiple recently obtained outdated T-shirts from Camp-O-Ong in the San Bernardino Mountains. He shipped them to a small school in the Philippines. The teacher wrote Heiple back thanking him and telling him that the shirts probably will be the only new clothes the children will ever receive.

"That's what makes it all worthwhile. The students and teachers I correspond with agree with me that education is the only way out in this world," he said.

It costs about $1 to ship one book.

"When people write me they tell me a lot about their countries and themselves. You don't realize how lucky you are until you hear about life in these countries. We're darn lucky. They ask me for information and sometimes for my opinions and I try and give them an honest answer," he said.

All donations to the organization are tax deductible. For more information about the International Book Project Inc., write 1440 Delaware Ave., Lexington, Ky. 40505.

Permanent Hair Removal

Superfluous or embarrassing hair usually isn't abnormal. The major factor of unwanted hair is heredity. Certain drugs, like birth control pills, can change your delicate glandular balance and can also cause superfluous hair to grow. Normal hormonal changes during puberty, pregnancy and menopause may also be a contributing factor.

Another element that can stimulate unwanted hair growth is stress! Any stressful situation can set off the adrenal gland that may create a hormonal reaction and cause fine, soft hair to become coarser and darker.

Today, the professional electrologist is in demand more and more as men and women face stress in their lives. The important thing to remember is this: NO MATTER WHAT THE CAUSE, UNWANTED HAIR CAN BE PERMANENTLY REMOVED.

Chaffey College opens football season

Chaffey College returns to the intercollegiate football wars Saturday afternoon after a five-year absence, and the Panthers are ready for the battle.

But in an interesting turn of events, host Victor Valley College will also be debuting its new grid team. The Rams have been without the sport for seven years, so it'll be a new experience for both teams.

The game, with a 1 p.m. kickoff, will be at Moore Stadium on the Victor Valley High School campus in Victorville.

"We're looking forward to it," said Panther head coach Orest Stetkevich prior to a practice session this week. "It's hard to tell what kind of a game it will be, but it's going to be tough."

Stetkevich was more than pleased with Chaffey's scrimmage last Saturday against the University of La

Verne. "It was an aggressive scrimmage, a baptism of fire for a lot of our players and we got to see everybody."

Together with his coaching staff, Stetkevich decided on a starting lineup and backup unit earlier this week. According to the head coach, the reserves have three days per week to take over the starting job.

"But those who are first string at the end of Thursday's practice will start Saturday," said Stetkevich, who was an assistant the last time Chaffey played football.

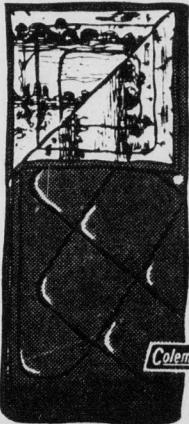

GETTING PREPARED — Chaffey College women's volleyball coach Marilyn Shaw passes out some instructions during a recent practice session. Shaw's squad won the Inland Valley Conference championship last year, but faces a rebuilding task this year.

HOW TO... WRITE A CLASSIFIED AD THAT WORKS!!

Give readers
the information they want and get the results...
YOU want.

be complete.

Put yourself in the reader's place. If you were considering buying this item what would you want to know about it? Give the item's age, condition, size, brand name and any other information needed to describe it accurately and completely.

avoid abbreviations.

A few standard abbreviations can help you save space but don't overdo it. Too many abbreviations will make your ad look like a secret coded message. Rather than trying to figure out what you're trying to say, confused readers will go on to the next ad.

include price.

Price is one of the biggest concerns of classified readers. Ads that list prices will get their attention first. Including the price will also help you avoid inquiries from readers not in your price range.

be available.

List your telephone number or address so potential buyers will know HOW to contact you. State the best hours to call so they'll know WHEN to contact you. If you're not home when an interested prospect calls, chances are he won't call back.

feel free to ask for help.

Because help is free for the asking. The Daily Report maintains a staff of professional Advisors who write dozens of ads every day. They'll be happy to help you word your ad for the best results.
